Adiponectin, a new molecule as a biomarker in liver fibrosis. Hepatic fibrosis is a wound-healing process stimulated by chronic inflammation that is driven by activated hepatic stellate cells and characterized by production of excessive extracellular matrix components. Adiponectin is an adipocyte-derived hormone that contributes to glucose and lipid metabolism. The aim of this study was to investigate whether and how adiponectin is associated with the progression of hepatic fibrosis. Plasma adiponectin concentrations were measured in 42 patients with chronic viral hepatitis (22 hepatitis B virus-related and 20 hepatitis C virus-related) and 20 healthy subjects. The effect of adiponectin on hepatic stellate cells (HSCs) was assessed using cultured HSCs and an in vivo mouse model of diet-induced hepatic fibrosis. Plasma adiponectin levels were significantly decreased in patients with chronic viral hepatitis compared with the healthy subjects. A significant negative correlation was found between plasma adiponectin levels and the liver-to-body weight ratio, histological staging of fibrosis, and serum hyaluronic acid. Adiponectin inhibited the proliferation of HSCs, attenuated liver collagen deposition, and promoted the expression of collagenases-1 and -3 in HSCs. In the CCl4-induced liver fibrosis model, adiponectin significantly decreased collagen deposition. These findings suggest that adiponectin promotes hepatic collagen degradation by inhibiting HSC proliferation and is a potential therapeutic target for hepatic fibrosis. The present invention relates to a process for the preparation of 3,3,3-trifluoropropene. More particularly, the present invention relates to a process for the preparation of 3,3,3-trifluoropropene which comprises effecting a reaction of 3,3,3-trifluoropropanol with hydrogen fluoride. Heretofore, an industrially preferable process for the preparation of 3,3,3-trifluoropropene (hereinafter sometimes referred to as TFP) is a process comprising effecting a reaction of 3,3,3-trifluoropropanol with hydrogen fluoride under certain reaction conditions to obtain the same as a reaction product, treating the reaction product with hydrogen fluoride so as to form hydrogen fluoride and thereafter removing hydrogen fluoride from the reaction product.
