Wants You to Think Like a Bat. Really. Last Thursday, US college students were treated to an afternoon full of inspiring and entertaining TED-style talks on a variety of fascinating subjects. All of which were given by scientists, no less. But the talk that grabbed my interest, and everyone else's attention, was given by Heather C. Everett, a neuroscientist from the University of Southern California. She was speaking to a group of mostly men about her research into what are called bat brains. Bats have an auditory cortex, that is, an area of the brain that processes sound and translates that information into the consciousness of a human. But bats don't have much else to process except sound. The problem is, bats have to spend 99% of their time underground, so all of the sound-processing they need to be able to make calls is going to be done in their brains, just as it would be for us. Most mammals, including humans, use their eardrums to figure out where the sound is coming from. But bats use something called the pinna (it's a sort of flap on their head that acts like a highly modified eardrum) to figure out where they are, and they aren't very good at that, either. And so, they are limited to being good at one thing — communicating with the outside world using a single narrowband pulse of sound. As Professor Everett puts it, they "mimic the way that we see". "A lot of the technology that we take for granted today would have been completely impossible to imagine a century ago," Everett said at the TEDGlobal conference, "which is why the bat inspired me. Bats have developed the most amazing technology that we use today." Bats' brains

System Requirements:

Windows Mac OS X Linux We had a hard time making the game stable on iOS and Mac. Basically all the work we've done so far was only on Windows and we need to update the main target to run on iOS and Mac OS X. We need someone who can create and test a demo to prove that everything is working fine on iOS and Mac. The game has been updated to support iOS and Mac so now everything is running as expected. We have just released a new build with iOS and Mac target, however
