Typical uses for aluminum pigments include corrosion resistance, wear resistance, heat resistance, moisture resistance, and scratch resistance, in addition to ultraviolet light protection. Typically, metal pigments, such as aluminum pigments, are produced by milling and extrusion of the metal starting material. Aluminum flakes generally have a thickness of 100 to 700 microns. The product produced by conventional processing techniques typically has a particle size distribution in the range of 1  $\mu$ m to 50  $\mu$ m (micron), more commonly in the range of 1 to 20  $\mu$ m. It is an object of the present invention to provide metal pigment compositions that exhibit improved properties and uses. The tool will scan all the network interfaces that are currently connected. The user can select the interface that contains the MAC address that he wants to change. The tool also shows the MAC address of the currently selected interface (be it the MAC address of the actual network adapter or the MAC address allocated to the interface by the network driver). The user can change the MAC address of any of the selected network adapters or leave them untouched. The tool provides a special function to rollback any changes made to the selected interface. Changes can be applied to the selected interface without closing or rebooting the device. The users can select any method of MAC address generation by himself, if required. All selected network adapters are listed and listed in an easy-to-follow format (code and name are shown, type of interface, generation method and MAC address are also shown). The changes made to the network adapters can be checked and saved to a file. The tool will also show the status of any changes made (an alert dialog will be displayed when the MAC address changes are not applied). If the user changes the MAC address of an interface that belongs to a VLAN, the changes are not applied to the adapter itself, but to the VLAN itself. Best of all, the tool will work on a system already prepared to receive changes. The changes are applied without any need of rebooting the system or closing
