About 85% of patients with unilateral renal agenesis are diagnosed before birth by ultrasound scan. In utero renal agenesis is asymptomatic and does not affect the growth of the lung. With prenatal diagnostic, it is diagnosed in the third trimester. Only in 50% of cases, chromosomal abnormalities are present. We present a pregnant woman with a feto-maternal trombotic occlusion of both renal arteries. A prenatal diagnosis was made, and an inferior cava as well as a aortic anastomosis was performed at the end of the first trimester. The clinical and ultrasonographic examination were performed at 28 weeks of pregnancy. No abnormalities were observed, and the infant showed no metabolic or functional disturbances. On the basis of this observation, we can suggest that in utero renal agenesis might not be a factor in the development of lung disorders, but that it can induce subtle structural changes in the fetus.
