This invention relates to a bus bar, and more particularly to a bus bar having electrical contacts spaced from one another by a controlled distance. For many years bus bars have been known and used in various situations. A principal use of the bus bar is to provide an electrical connection from one or more electrical supply sources, e.g., a power source and/or a ground connection, to an electrical load, such as, for example, a lamp. An example of a prior art bus bar assembly is shown in FIG. 1. The bus bar assembly includes a bus bar 1 having a plurality of spaced apart electrical contacts 2 that are electrically connected to a supply source, e.g., a power source and/or a ground connection (not shown). The electrical contacts 2 extend from one side of the bus bar 1 and are arranged in rows and/or columns, e.g., an xe2x80x9cXxe2x80x9d pattern is shown in FIG. 1. The electrical contacts 2 are adapted to receive an electrical connection from a wire 6 and/or a fixture 8. The wire 6 is connected at a distal end to an electrical load, e.g., a lamp, which is not shown. The distal end of the wire 6 is inserted into a socket 4 having a slot 7 to assure that a solder connection is made between the wire 6 and a hole 8 that is located on one or more of the electrical contacts 2, which forms a circuit between the electrical source and the lamp. In prior art bus bar assemblies, the spacing of the electrical contacts 2 in rows and/or columns is not controlled, and thus, the spacing between the electrical contacts 2 may vary from the desired distance. The prior art solution to provide a variable spacing between the electrical contacts 2 has been to change the thickness of the bus bar 1. For example, a greater thickness may be provided between adjacent contacts, or a bus bar having electrical contacts located at less than a predetermined distance apart may be fabricated. This prior art approach suffers from the disadvantage that a new type of bus bar must be fabricated for each desired spacing between the electrical contacts, resulting in increased manufacturing costs. A bus bar assembly including a bus bar that has a plurality of electrical contacts that are spaced from one another by a predetermined distance is provided. The bus bar includes a body having a plurality of first holes spaced from one another by a plurality of first distances and a plurality of second holes spaced from one another by a plurality of second
