Zoom support in Firefox is your best friend, right? It lets you move the web browser to the point on the screen where you want, so that you can then easily and efficiently scroll through the pages. Whether you are surfing on your PC, tablet or smartphone, Zoom is a pretty handy feature to have. However, it is not automatically activated by default in Firefox. To get it enabled, you have to either go to the Options or Download addons menus, find the Zoom addon, and select it for enabling. After that, it will be used each time you open Firefox.

Xmouse Description: The program is able to capture screenshots of your desktop, and save them in several formats. All the screenshot functions can be launched from the main Xmouse dialog box, and they are organized into categories. The most frequently used settings can be found under the image capture tab. Those include the resolution of the screenshots as well as the methods of saving them – Xorg, Xorg with Cairo, or Cairo. There is a much smaller section under the general tab that allows you to control the background color of screenshots, the screenshot rotation and cursor placement. It is a useful program, although it is still missing a number of features, such as the ability to save screenshots in slideshow format, the possibility to load images directly from a file or from the clipboard, and more.

Xmouse description: It may be a bit of a cliché to say that the world of browser games is incredibly vast, but it is true. You can play them on any platform, and they generally run in any browser. If you don't like the way that some developers put out their titles, you can always make your own, and the possibilities are virtually endless. Good browser games are a great way to pass the time on your computer, but they don't have to be made in Flash. There are a number of web-based games that can be executed in the browser, so it doesn't matter what platform you use. To make things even easier, you should try to play only those browser games that have a community. There are not as many players in the majority of free browser games, but the community for those that exist is quite active, and there is a lot of fun to be had by making friends with other players.
