Life by Design was the theme of the 46th Meeting of the AAAI Conference (AAAI-19) in Boston, Massachusetts. We took a tour of Israel to see some of the most amazing designed landscapes. Being surrounded by lush greenery is definitely refreshing after a day of work. At the meeting, a panel discussion on the utility of AI to improve communication in disparate communities convened in the afternoon. One of the panel members asked a question that got everyone thinking: Does AI (artificial intelligence) have a place in diplomacy? The speakers agreed that artificial intelligence (AI) has the potential to help diplomats navigate complex systems and automate existing communications; however, they warned that maintaining credibility of AI solutions with policymakers, especially in closed societies, is paramount. "This can potentially backfire," warned one member of the panel. That brings us to the topic of this post: How can social media platforms (e.g., Facebook, Twitter, etc.) provide solutions to some of the challenges in dispersed communities? Effective communication with diverse populations, especially in the digital world, is a daunting task, as members of various communities are influenced by their friends, family, environment and culture, which varies from community to community. Twitter-style social media platforms (e.g., Twitter, Facebook, etc.) can enhance a representative's credibility when addressing diverse populations. Furthermore, social media platforms can help to improve human-machine interaction and to create a sense of community; these platforms have the potential to become platforms for social good. New-media technology has, to a certain extent, changed the way human beings communicate. Such technology allows individuals to connect with other individuals through social media platforms such as Twitter, which is a fast-moving communication platform. Here we discuss some of the barriers that have to be overcome to get our message across and the solutions from the perspective of our work in the social sector. A growing awareness of the world's issues is changing the way people communicate and access information. At the same time, this trend is transforming the media as we know it. As a result, there is a growing interest in the

What's New in the JMapView?

JMapView was built to allow flightgear users to see their location on a moving map. While building this app, I have played with the JFreeChart and SwingX libraries in order to generate the map layer. Features: Easy to use. Supports both, fullscreen and window mode. It is advised to set the correct java version in the preferences. Set the required privileges to run the App. The map can be initialized from a path. The map can be zoomed/moved and the frame painted again and again with new map. By pressing the locator (search) button you can find airport locations. The map can also be panned with the mouse. Screenshots: Known Issues: This application crashes while generating the map layer (using JFreeChart/SwingX/JavaFX) and/or when painting the map frame.Regional cerebral blood flow in experimental allergic encephalomyelitis in the mouse. In the periphery of the brain this was associated with leakage of Evans blue dye on the same side. The blood-brain barrier was therefore intact.Q: How to update jquery plugin if I change its name I currently have a jquery plugin called 'admin' and it has some functions. I want to change the name to 'management'. So the 'admin' plugin changes for the 'management' plugin. So the problem is when I add the plugins to a page, I want the original function name to be 'admin'. Any ideas? A: After you rename the plugin file and change the code inside, you can reload the page and the auto-generated DOM node ids will be that of the old plugin so your javascript will still work.
