Some network settings are located inside the Command Prompt. The Windows 7 and Windows Server 2008 Command Prompt can be used to perform these tasks. You must first launch the Command Prompt by typing cmd.exe in the Start menu. By using the appropriate settings, you can update the DNS settings, turn off the Windows firewall, or pause the Windows Update service. There are a number of basic commands that are included with the Command Prompt. Each is a separate button located in the Control Panel window. There are also a number of advanced Command Prompt commands. These include the ping command, the tracert command, and the netsh command. The DNS tab contains settings related to how the computer interacts with the internet. You can switch back and forth between the Settings tab and the Command Prompt by using the arrow buttons at the top of the Control Panel window. - Megha Chatterjee
