[An unusual case of tuberculous prostatism treated with Erlotinib as a neoadjuvant chemotherapy]. Tuberculous prostatism is a rare condition which may mimic other tumors or cancer and induce a late diagnosis. It is often resistant to medical treatment. The aim of our study is to present a case of tuberculous prostatism treated by Erlotinib which made a complete resolution. A 64-year-old male with a progressive prostate tumor, mimicking prostate cancer, with no urinary symptoms and an abnormal PSA (0.7 g/L) was referred to our urology department. The prostate tissue was sampled by transrectal biopsy which yielded positive results for acid-fast bacilli, and histological, bacteriological and molecular investigations confirmed the diagnosis of prostatitis due to mycobacterium tuberculosis. The patient underwent a neoadjuvant chemotherapy with Erlotinib. Nine months later, the patient had complete resolution of the tumor and PSA values remained within the normal range. The neoadjuvant chemotherapy with Erlotinib was efficient in our patient. It may be an alternative to traditional antituberculous drugs because it is less toxic.

Well, they even had a little baby, and I knew I wanted to make one for Halloween. I asked my oldest sister what she thought the kids would wear, and she suggested a witch hat and a red dress. My oldest daughter is starting Pre-K classes this week, and she wanted to dress up as a princess. I asked her if a dress would be too short, and
