As an apparatus for converting electrical energy into light energy, there have been known a variety of apparatuses such as a semiconductor laser, a light-emitting diode, a solar cell, and the like. Since the above devices have high efficiency of conversion of electricity into light, power semiconductor devices such as a diode, a transistor, and the like are indispensable devices for the apparatuses which convert electrical energy into light energy. In addition, a semiconductor laser device is also indispensable in the field of communication as a light source for optical communication which transmits a very large quantity of data at a high speed by light. The above-mentioned power semiconductor devices are categorized into a p-n junction type device and a Schottky barrier type device which is called Schottky barrier diode (hereinafter, referred to as Schottky barrier diode device). The Schottky barrier diode is a rectifying device which has very high efficiency of conversion of electricity into light, and besides, the device is suitable for high-speed and high-energy operations, and has other excellent characteristics. These characteristics are used in a light-emitting diode (LED) and a laser diode. The Schottky barrier diode has a p-type semiconductor layer (p-type layer) and a n-type semiconductor layer (n-type layer) that are laminated on each other. The p-type and n-type layers are arranged so that the n-type layer is in contact with a metal layer as an electrode. A Schottky barrier is formed at an interface between the metal layer and the n-type layer. There is a problem that a reverse voltage is applied to the diode while the current is not flowing through the device, so that the diode is hardly used practically. A Japanese Laid-Open Patent Publication No. 9-172573 describes an example of a method of fabricating a Schottky barrier diode which has a lowered reverse-
