Thanks, BAxBEx SoftwareQ: About using jwplayer for a private personal website So, my friend and I want to use jwplayer for our very own personal websites. We want to use it to play some videos that are synced with our own php/mysql backend. I've been reading about how easy it would be to put video from youtube to jwplayer (or some other video hosting website like vimeo, blip.tv, etc) and then all you'd need to do would be to connect to your backend and transfer data. We are, however, not using youtube. Instead, we have some media that is streamed over some network protocol (I don't know the name). We want to turn this stream into a visual experience. I have never used jwplayer before, so I don't know if it can handle the stream that we have? Thanks in advance. A: JWPlayer can handle any video format and network type, it has many Flash / Java fallback methods. However, there are some flash/java types that are not too well supported. For example, you need to set up your flash/java fallback method for

What's New in the BxNewFolder?

Create a new folder inside the Windows Explorer directory structure with just one click. Similar to Right Click, but just for Windows Explorer. The new folder will be created directly under the folder you've pointed to with the button. With the new folder, you can add your own sub-folders with ease. F12 Key to new folder, delete from main folder. NOTE: While bxNewFolder is designed to be a fast, compact application to create a new folder inside the Windows Explorer, the application can also be used as a Explorer replacement for the new taskbar buttons, the "New Folder" button of Windows Explorer, and the "Create New Folder" dialog. This allows you to create a new folder in Explorer with just one click, while using the main functionality of bxNewFolder, without the overhead or the delay of using "New Folder" button of Windows Explorer, or "Create New Folder" dialog. bxNewFolder Compatible With All Windows XP, Vista, 7, 8, 8.1. bxNewFolder Compatible With Windows Explorer 7.
