During his doctoral studies, Dr. Kapur investigated the brain's implementation of knowledge with regards to how learned contextual information is used to guide action on a trial-by-trial basis. He discovered that the hippocampus is required to build integrated memories that are stable over time. He is also interested in how distinct types of memories are mapped onto multiple cognitive domains. This research was published in Nature Neuroscience. His research has been funded by the Wellcome Trust, the ERC, the UCL Graduate School, the Cambridge Doctoral Scholarship, the Royal Society and the John Templeton Foundation. In his spare time, Dr. Kapur enjoys music, playing the violin and traditional Indian classical Indian music.

Q: How to know which edges should be snapped to the grid? I'm new to blender. How do I know which edges to snap to the grid? I want to snap all the edges that are "semi transparent" to the grid, but I don't know which kind of edges I can be "semi transparent". So, how can I know which edges I should set to snap to the grid? A: You select edges on the edge loop and press S to select "Snap to Grid", choosing to snap to the grid center. Make sure that "Grid" is shown as an option and select "Press" instead of "Select" before you press S. Alternatively, you can also choose to edit the edge loop in edit mode, and temporarily change the edge loop to face the opposite direction, such that the edges are being selected against the grid, and they are in the correct orientation for snapping (assuming it's a mesh made from quads). This is covered in the tutorial tutorial, which starts: Start selecting edges and creating your mesh by adding loops, and in the next few steps make sure you first create the edge loops. You will need to create an edge loop for every side of your mesh. For this process you should select all the edges and then press S

Using PyCharm my program opens a file, gets the number of pages and text, and then I need to return the cursor back to the last active cell. I am using Jupyter Notebook. I have tried my best using `returnID = edit.searchCursor(num=True, forward=True, anchor='end')`. The previous paragraph opens the file, extracts the text, and then returns the cursor to the last cell on the same page. How can I return the cursor back to the last active cell? A: It would seem that the problem could be solved by using `currentCell = edit.get_selected_cell().text` And then using I'm just gonna borrow code from here, because there is a lot of information on the internet about this specific question, and I might as well share the information.
