I have a small app that needs to get the value of a system variable (e.g. PATH). With the exe file running I can output the value using `system::system('echo %PATH%')` and it shows the value of the variable. I am now trying to do this with NSIS and need to get the value of `${NSIS_CONFIG_SYSTEM_VARIABLES}::system::system` and it shows $0. However I need to get the actual value of the variable. Can anyone tell me the proper way of doing that? A: get system variable NSIS has a class "System" which contains more functions for dealing with this. `system Get system configuration and return system value.` Q: Ubuntu 14.04 cannot connect to wifi networks Everything worked fine until I had a kernel upgrade. Now I cannot connect to any wifi network. Here is the log. A: Try to fix your internet connection settings in the following way: Run the following command in the terminal: `sudo dhclient wlan0` You should now be connected to the internet. In case of no connection after that try also to execute the following command: Run the following command in the terminal: `sudo rmmod iwlmvm` This should disable any already loaded iwlmvm module. Run the following command in the terminal: `sudo modprobe iwlmvm` You should now be connected to the internet. If you see any error messages, in case of no internet connection after that, please report it to us here. Thermochemical kinetics of the main oxidation pathways of 1,3-cyclohexadiene.
