I have a simple test case, that when running it as a script to test to setup/unset a virtual environment, shows that the sys.path is not updated when using virtualenv: script.py #!/usr/bin/env python import sys, os sys.path.append(r"..\site-packages") import virtualenv def setup_virtual_environment(): virtualenv.activate() def teardown_virtual_environment(): virtualenv.deactivate() setup_virtual_environment() import sys import time time.sleep(1) print sys.path Running it as script.py shows that sys.path is empty: ['', '/Users/dsb/dev/script.py'] But running it from a virtual environment using python script.py, shows that the sys.path is properly updated and includes the virtualenv module directory: ['', '/Users/dsb/dev/virtualenvs/my_virtual_env/lib/python2.7/site-packages'] This is the output of python script.py: ['', '/Users/dsb/dev/script.py'] ['', '/Users/dsb/dev/virtualenvs/my_virtual_env/lib/python2.

Elden Ring Features Key:

Action RPG (RPG) Action RPG where you can refine your skills and abilities at the level that you want to use them. The journey to becoming an Elden Lord involves meeting new people, receiving orders from a variety of Elden Lords, and receiving the assistance of the various people and monsters around you. There are three types of skills: offense and defense, magic, and support. Each skill has both an offensive and defensive version. Your attack, defense, and how you use them are decided by your decision of the type of battle. Defeated monsters can continue to fight in the next encounter. Skills that strengthen the offense will only work when you are matched up against the enemy (EX + Offense). Skills that strengthen defense will only work when the opposing party is strong (EX + Defense).
ARP System You can improve and cultivate new allies by lending them different rings. Your party members will participate in battles with the strength of their weapon. The ARP system makes it more fun to fight while traveling through an unknown area with a multitude of monsters. Even if your allies go down, players can continue their journey by drawing on the strength of allies who have not been directly involved in the fight. All users are not equal. You may become a stronger warrior by lending rings to allies who can work together with you. However, lending rings decreases your own offensive power and defense.
Enhance Your Party The more you do a quest, the stronger your party members will become. A Party Function where up to four users can participate. Even non-player characters can participate in battle. You can always find a way to strengthen your party by lending rings to friends who are stronger. Magic Circle to Set Your My Own Style
Combat System Where You are the Star! Break out of the combat system of WoW with a "7 Days in a Row" system. You can balance the many burdens of your job such as sword attack and defense, sword attack and magic, by changing your way of thinking. The sword attack and defense of sword attack and magic can be strengthened by deliberately selecting the attack and defense method of a particular suit of armor, and the amount of force with which you wield your weapon on attack and defense can be increased with level-ups. There is a level-up

It's taken me a long time to get excited, but it seems like it's well worth getting excited about now. Edit: Holy crap, it's so good (also so bad). It's been a very long time since I've played Runescape, but I can say that I never really felt so deep into the world as I have in the past few days. It feels like a very, very different game. The combat is intensely satisfying, there's lots of replayability in the massive and intricate content, and the graphics are beautiful. The new fantasy action RPG.
