One of the key reasons HyperMotion Technology was created was because other football games felt like a static sport simulation. Dynamic Player Motion Technology (DPMT) was the key component that allowed for dynamic, reactive gameplay. DPMT enables a more lifelike player-on-ball and player-to-player interaction. The reaction to a tackle can be scripted to unique situations and situations dependent on players' actions on the pitch, like a "through ball" to an attacker. For example, the ball can receive speed and spin on the way into a goal. For a full dive or slide tackle, a player could be scripted to go from a full dive or slide tackle to a weaker tackle to neutralize the ball to protect the goal. With the addition of new animations and improved defensive and offensive animations, the team is focused on making soccer more player-centric.

Player Status While you play as teams of 11 players in FIFA World Cup and World Cup Qualification, you can opt to play as a team of just 14 players in play-off matches. Regardless of the number of players on your team, you can play as any position (eg. Defender, Midfielder, Forward, Goalkeeper). This allows players to role-play according to their background and authentic in-depth play styles.

New Ball Physics The new ball physics feature lets the ball behave like a real ball. It's accurate and realistic to the physics of a real ball in the air.

This new, advanced ball physics feature really changes how you play. It is now possible to pass the ball to any attacker on the goal line and impact the opponents' defensive line, intercept passes, weave through passes and passes that are cut out or blocked by other players. By adapting the real-life physics of the ball, game play is more reactive and responsive to how and when you play the ball. Player skill, ball physics and environmental factors all impact the momentum of the ball, resulting in a more engaging and exciting game. All of this results in a game that feels more realistic and more engaging. Over the Top FIFA World Cup's Over the Top feature is now integrated into gameplay. Over the Top builds on, and is connected to, Goalkeeper HD. Like Goalkeeper HD, Over the Top enables users to pick out the best goal kicks of each match. Goalkeeper HD now includes goalkeeper techniques to allow players to opt
