The technology allows players to react quicker and more accurately than ever before. During gameplay, players will use the D-pad on-screen to move their in-game avatar using any direction they like, rather than following the stick movements of a physical controller. Players will be able to react with perfect precision to every animation on-screen, enabling them to seamlessly react to moving shots, like a free kick and the fast counter-attack created by passing into a crowded penalty box. Players will be able to choose their desired speed of action or counter with the flick of a button, perfect for quick reactions against defenders. The technology is used in a variety of ways within Fifa 22 Product Key gameplay. For example, players can shoot a football across the pitch towards their goal, and FIFA's artificial intelligence will seamlessly make a run for the ball. The moment the ball is won, the motion-capture technology will react and instantly show a cut-scene replicating the real-life player movement on screen. "HyperMotion Technology works by providing the game with data to allow it to create a football experience that will help players become more accurate and more in control of their playing action," said Creative Director, Javier Ruiz, Director of FIFA, Playability & Gameplay. "This technology allows us to create simulation that is so much more in-depth and realistic than any football game before.” Instant replay was also adapted to incorporate motion-capture technology in FIFA 22, which enables players to instantly save screenshots of a single moment in a match. Using the motion-capture data generated from the match, FIFA will show players the exact movement from the player on-screen. The player will be able to use the D-pad to rewind and fast-forward their movements, while players can also use it to take back-sweeps, goal-kicks and other key actions they took during the game. The technology also allows for instant replays to be re-viewed from any angle, including the precise position and angle of the ball at any moment. “Over the years we’ve invested heavily in delivering meaningful gameplay, realism and innovation. We think this is the perfect time to bring in additional technology that is going to boost the realism of the sport for players and fans around the world,” Ruiz added.
