“HyperMotion Technology” makes for the most varied and realistic football experience, and is also the most precise and authentic AI system ever seen in FIFA,” said Seb Boyce, General Manager, FIFA. “This revolutionary technology replicates the exact movement of 22 players across multiple on-ball and off-ball movements. Combined with the most realistic ball physics and pitch surface features to date, FIFA 22 is the best-ever simulation of football for players who want to truly experience the game as a global phenomenon.” “We are incredibly proud to play a role in helping to bring the FIFA game to life in a way that its fans love,” said Steve Small, Creative Director at EA SPORTS FIFA and Executive Producer at EA SPORTS. “The opportunity to take our years of work on gameplay and player movement and bring it to life in FIFA 22, simply to try something different, and to experience what the game would feel like as a real-life athlete, was a unique one for us. “Watching our players running across the game-world and making full-body moves on other players was a real joy for them to experience. The data is then sent to the EA SPORTS FIFA Team data center to be used in real-time during gameplay, bringing these millions of on-field player movements and reactions to life in FIFA 22. "We're very proud to be able to create this breakthrough technology," said Dr. Karl-Johan Michels, Senior Creative Director, EA Sports FIFA. "This is the culmination of our team's dedication to FIFA, as we moved away from our typical 3D characters to an entirely new level of player motion capture and AI. We want to deliver the most realistic experience possible to the player." FIFA's goals for player performance in FIFA 22 were challenging. Not only were they trying to recreate the fluidity of real-world movements, but also capture the most authentic and realistic player behavior. The ultimate goal is to emulate players' real-life soccer DNA in a realistic way. For example, players make runs and
