Dr. Fazal Sheikh, Saskatchewan's chief medical health officer, confirmed the province's response to a public health emergency during an interview with CBC Radio's Saskatoon Morning on Wednesday. "We are well prepared. It's a short and long term issue," Sheikh said. "There is a very strong plan in place. We will be able to react to this." The public health emergency would likely be used for cases of COVID-19. The virus responsible for the disease can be transmitted through close contact between people. Dr. Fazal Sheikh, Saskatchewan's chief medical health officer, confirmed the province's response to a public health emergency would be used to deal with a COVID-19 outbreak. (Jason Warick/CBC) The plan would consist of three parts. Quarantines The first component of the plan would be to isolate people if their potential exposure to the virus was confirmed by the World Health Organization (WHO) through testing. "Some of the measures [could include] where we would isolate the people," Sheikh said. "And we would use those measures on people who have been exposed, and we would not let them leave the house." The second component would be to use social distancing measures to keep people living in close quarters. "We would have to use social distancing to reduce the number of contacts," Sheikh said. School closings The third component would be to close schools, depending on the location and the severity of the outbreak. "It would depend on the situations that we are seeing," Sheikh said. "We are prepared to do that if we need to." Sheikh said the mass quarantines could last a few weeks. He said there are enough supplies in place to see the plan through to the end. "It's a short and long term issue." MORE TOP STORIESQ: Store a timestamp as a VARCHAR I am trying
