Chemoprevention by sulfasalazine of azathioprine-induced depletion and atrophy of rat gastric glandular mucosa. Sulfasalazine, a unique derivative of 5-ASA, given in a dose of 300 or 600 mg/kg/day for 26 or 17 days, respectively, to azathioprine-treated rats, was shown to completely prevent the depletion and atrophy of gastric glandular mucosa and its microvasculature induced by azathioprine. Since 5-ASA itself has an ulcerogenic potential in the rat stomach, we present data on the toxicology of sulfasalazine. Toxicity studies in rats showed that sulfasalazine was far less toxic than azathioprine, as reflected by significantly fewer affected rats in the sulfasalazine dose groups than in the azathioprine group. In addition, no morphological changes were found in tissues, including the stomach, in the sulfasalazine dose groups. To the best of our knowledge, this is the first report demonstrating the chemopreventive properties of sulfasalazine against azathioprine-induced atrophy of rat gastric glandular mucosa.

Study of Methicillin-Resistant Staphylococcus aureus in Hematology/Oncology Nursing Settings and Its Associated Risk Factors. The aim of this study was to determine the frequency of Staphylococcus aureus in patients and to identify the responsible and risk factors associated with it in hematology/oncology inpatient units. In this retrospective study, a descriptive and comparative statistical design was used. Samples were obtained from the nose, throat, perineum, perianal area, axilla, and hand. The samples were taken from patients hospitalized in hematology/oncology units. The recovered isolates were identified by conventional biochemical methods, and their resistance was determined by using the disk diffusion method. Demographic data and risk factors were collected using data forms. The data were analyzed by using descriptive statistical tests, such as percentages, frequencies, mean, and standard deviation. A total of 52 isolates of S. aureus were detected. The resistance rate was 88.5%. The resistance percentages were 74.4% against erythromycin, 76.9% against clindamycin, and 44.4% against cotrimoxazole. The prevalence of methicillin-resistant S. a
