"There are five five kinds of people in the world. Those who can make a career out of it. Those who can't." I've had longish but limited experience with fantasy games. Shadowrun OD&D in college. Greyhawk in middle school. Never anything more. Shadowrun had me hooked. A number of friends for many years. A whole culture behind it. Soon once played D&D after playing Shadowrun so it was easy to find a group. And so I fell in love with fantasy games. Fast forward 30 years later. I played Shadowrun again and fell more and more in love. Wanting to become a part of it. But I felt very lonely in it. Very few people in the US play SR. How could I play with others? So I tried playing a couple of AD&D games. I love that game but it doesn't have a huge following. And I can't find a community. So why not try RPG? I've been playing Pathfinder for the last half year or so. I love it but I find it hard to create a story for myself in it. That's OK, I'm learning. I plan to try something else. Tried Dungeons and Dragons some more in college. I remember really liking that game. I just didn't feel like it was suited for me. I'm not trying to be rude, it really is not how I want to play. It was simple rules but very complex play. I didn't enjoy it so I didn't play it more than two times. So how do I play then? I just want a fantasy game where I can create my own story. That doesn't have to be epic. But there should be a number of paths. All I really want is to create my own story. I also want to play with others. I've seen it done in a lot of games, but I just don't know where to find them. The online thing is good, but it doesn't allow me to meet others. I used to like playing with friends in Shadowrun OD&D. So I'm wanting to do something like that. I know people who play w/ people online. But I don't have a

"We are very worried about the situation, we cannot say anything. We hope [the bodies] will be buried soon," said Foday Muchomamwa, a local journalist. It has been reported that there are currently several dozen dozen bodies spread across various locations, including a hall in the Goma market, the house of the Congolese military chief and even the market's washing area. The dead include nationals from Rwanda, Uganda and Burundi. It remains unclear which rebel group is behind the bloodiest conflict in eastern Congo since a 2008-2009 war between rebels and government forces which killed an estimated 5.4 million people. The conflict continues to divide DRC's four regions and has caused one of the fastest growing humanitarian crises in Africa. The mayor, Jean-Marie Okombo, said the bodies were being "taken to different locations because there are not enough coffins to transport all of them."
