.Samsung's Galaxy S7 range is a hit with consumers but it's caught some flak from resellers. "Sale or trade-in of the Samsung Galaxy S7 and Samsung Galaxy S7 Edge, any variations from the standard designs, and any accessories that come with them, is not permitted under any circumstances," a well-known mobile phone retailer told PCWorld. "There's a reason the S7 is not available for trade in. It has sold out and you will not be able to buy one on contract. In order to buy a S7, you need to pay upfront for the full price, no strings attached." The retailer, who asked to remain anonymous, said that as of two weeks ago, the handset has sold out in its store, but the website was still taking orders. "We had one Galaxy S7 Edge in stock and it was in pristine condition, but no one wanted it," the retailer said. Read this "Most people who walk through the front door of our store have a Galaxy S8 or iPhone 8 in their hand." The retailer said the same thing happened with the release of the iPhone 7, where some people were looking for a replacement despite the handset coming with free upgrades for the rest of 2017. "The final Galaxy S8 Edge with a black box and leather band is going for $1,100, which is the same price as the Galaxy S7 Edge with a black box, leather band and a few other options," the retailer said. For those people who want an upgrade from the flagship Samsung handset, they can wait until March to get their hands on an S8. The Galaxy S8 has been criticised for being expensive, with some reports suggesting the phone will be priced at $1,300. In an effort to shore up supply, Samsung is reportedly planning a soft launch of the handsets in Asia on 29 February. The handset will not be launched in the US, UK, France, or Germany at the moment.
