Prince Bader Alzayya Prince Bader Alzayya (; born 1949), is a Bahraini economist, former president of the International Federation of Business and Professional Councils, former vice-chairman of the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations (ECOSOC) and former chairman of the Arab Group of the UN. Born in Bahrain on July 12, 1949, Alzayya became the only Bahraini to serve as a member of the UN General Assembly, after he was elected in September 2011. In addition to his diplomatic career, Alzayya also served as an ambassador of Bahrain to the World Trade Organization, and he has been a governor of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement in Geneva. References Category:1949 births Category:Living people Category:Bahraini economists Category:Bahraini diplomatsIn the past, oxygen has been generated by the burning of fossil fuels, such as coal, natural gas, and petroleum. As these resources become depleted, alternative processes have been sought for efficiently generating large amounts of oxygen for use in purifying drinking water, producing chemical products, and other industrial processes. Electrically driven air separation systems have thus been used to produce purified oxygen. The electrical power required for these systems is supplied by solar cells or nuclear fission. A typical air separation system is shown in FIG. 1. Air is drawn through a compressor 1 and is introduced into the oxygen and nitrogen separation unit 2. The separation unit is provided with a plurality of oxygen adsorption units 3 and nitrogen adsorption units 4. The most common method of separating the oxygen from the air is by adsorbing the oxygen on the surfaces of molecular sieves that have high affinity for the oxygen. As the air flows over the surfaces of the adsorption unit, oxygen is adsorbed by the surface of the molecular sieve. The oxygen is subsequently desorbed by reducing the pressure on the molecular sieve with the aid of a vacuum pump 11. A separate vacuum pump 12 is provided for desorbing the nitrogen from the nitrogen adsorption unit 4. One drawback of this system is that the oxygen production rate is limited by the available amount of surface area on the molecular sieves. In addition, the oxygen recovery percentage is limited by the rate at which oxygen can be adsorbed from the air and subsequently desorbed from the molecular sieve. In order to increase the production rate of the oxygen, the amount
