. While I have not had any free time in the past two days due to hospitalization, I have completed the latest Orcad release, which takes care of the major issues as outlined in my posts below. After testing Orcad, I noticed that there is a new dialog box entitled "Sprinter" that allows you to define your boundary and toolpath information, as opposed to the old "Layer" dialog box. Although I can certainly benefit from this new dialog box, it seems too limited in nature and cannot easily be used for multi-layer work. My previous posts on Orcad problems with Ceramic, Accutran, and DoCo, include the information posted by Denis in April 2013, regarding the possibility of over-riding the value of the minimum layer thickness in a new drill file. This would certainly add to the flexibility of the program, but only if this capability is somehow implemented in the Sprinter dialog box. I certainly would not want to re-invent the wheel as Denis has done, given the existing dialog box format and function. As far as Tim

Heinemann goes, I am glad to see that his suggestions have been adopted, and that he is still involved with Orcad, despite his problems with Ceramic. Also, I am pleased that the FTD Rockwell forum is still active, with updates on "removals" from the Orcad database. As far as Rockwell is concerned, I have not found any satisfactory answers as to how to use the newer version of the software, specifically Allegro; however, there is no real alternative for Rockwell users, if they want to use Allegro. I have not even been able to find any downloads for Allegro 15.7 that I could determine to work; however, I did find older releases in the same format: Allegro 2003, Allegro 2004, Allegro 2005, Allegro 2006, and Allegro 2007. I have not tried those versions, but the trials were successful, so my suggestion would be to download the older versions and use them. As far as I can tell, the best alternative for Rockwell users is to use Allegro, and be aware that changes can be made to the program at any time. If your changes cause the program not to work properly, then my suggestion would be to update the program as needed. Another Rockwell issue is the update that is needed to the older versions of Accutran and DoCo to work with Allegro and OrCad 17

Morphological alterations were observed in the cytoplasm of follicular cells, epithelial cells and interstitial macrophages.

Follicular cell cytoplasm contained many lysosomes, and intracytoplasmic lumen contained almost always large amounts of dark material, the presence of which was particularly marked in cells having undergone degenerative changes. In follicular lumens large amounts of brightly stained foreign bodies were seen. The great number of lysosomes and the large size of the large profiles suggest that their content is mainly composed of microorganisms and their end products.

The rapid reaction of follicular cells to inflammatory stimuli suggest that thyrocytes play a major role in the defense against infections by pathogenic bacteria.

The presence of large amounts of lysosomes in epithelial cells is likely to indicate the occurrence of resorption processes. The non-occurrence of degenerative changes in epithelial cells is due to the absence of the highly abundant diet in which these cells are found. The presence of large amounts of foreign bodies in interstitial macrophages suggests that these cells are involved in the phagocytosis of foreign material. The present invention relates generally to direct current (DC) machines and the like and more particularly to a direct current machine having means for trimming the windings. There are numerous types of direct current machines that are known. In general, such direct current machines comprise a rotor or armature that is disposed concentric with a stat
