EEEV is the leading cause of viral encephalitis in North America and is the only alphavirus known to cause human disease. EEEV has a stable, temperature-sensitive, double-stranded RNA genome encoding two major polypeptides, a non-structural polyprotein which replicates the genomic RNA and a single structural polyprotein which is the precursor to the major virus-encoded glycoproteins. The replication protein contains two enzymatic activities, proteinase (3C-like) and methyltransferase (MTase), that process the viral genome to yield RNA for packaging into progeny virions. The N-terminal region of the non-structural polyprotein is the precursor to the 3' co-terminal subdomains of the structural protein that mediate assembly and egress of infectious virus. We have developed a reverse genetics system for EEEV, which allows us to study viral growth kinetics, virus production, assembly and budding. We have also assembled infectious virus-like particles (VLPs), which are useful as a vaccine component and in screening vaccine candidates and antiviral therapeutics. VLPs are formed when the structural protein subdomains are expressed in bacteria in the absence of the co-translational assembly machinery, and thus do not require an infectious virus genome. We propose to develop a molecular-level understanding of the biological processes during EEEV infection using a combination of quantitative mass spectrometry and quantitative reverse transcription-PCR. We will also use molecular-level analysis to investigate the impact of host cell factors on EEEV replication and VLP formation. These experiments will help to establish a deeper understanding of the replication of a virus that is a major cause of human disease. Relevance: - Our goal is to study how EEEV and other viruses replicate their genomes and to use this knowledge to develop novel drugs against these pathogens. - For example, we have found that one of the two viral methyltransferases, which modify a nucleotide

The North Korean Z-1 missile launched on April 5 from the western part of Sain Jangchol Island in the Sea of Japan was put into the state of the art equipment of Korean rocket scientists. Tests conducted at the Sain Jangchol Island successfully verified the vacuum tube circuit of the two engines and the chamber of acceleration, said a source on the naval base. The source from the base said that it was not yet determined which specific model of vehicle the Z-1 can be used for, but it is aimed at a short-range missile with a potential range of about 2 to 3 meters. First deputy director general for military affairs of the Korean People's Army (KPA), Ri Jong-seok, told a session of the National Assembly in the morning that the military has been studying the possibility of using the Z-1 missile. "Test tests with the Z-1 are being carried out
