Q: Do multiple WebMethods in a.NET application actually allow for them to be called in parallel? The technical question is, as I understand it, does the.NET framework in it's CLR implementation actually allow for multiple Method calls to happen in a single thread at the same time? For example, if I have something like this: public void FirstMethod() { SecondMethod(); } public void SecondMethod() { ThirdMethod(); } public void ThirdMethod() { DoSomeWork(); FourthMethod(); } public void FourthMethod() { FifthMethod(); } I feel like this is almost just like a single threaded implementation where it's at worst serialized (which I see all the time in AOP situations) or it can potentially return before the current method completes. Am I missing anything? A: From CLR Internals: Determining which methods can be called out of order is an interesting matter. From the code-gen perspective, I would say the only methods you can call out of order are methods that are not marked [System.Security.SecurityCritical] and do not perform any security checks. However, for an in-process Common Language Runtime object you have access to the IRuntimeContext which gives you the possibility of adjusting the stack depth on a per-frame basis. You can also call out of order using the new*() construct on type[level]s. By accessing the IRuntimeContext IRuntimeTypeResolver you can infer the method's calling conventions. For example, a method marked with any of the following attributes may be called out of order: [System.Security.SecurityCritical] [System.Security.SecuritySafeCritical] [System.Security.SecurityCritical] [System.Security.SecuritySafeCritical] [System.Security.SecurityPermission(SecurityAction.Demand)] [System.Security.PermissionSet(SecurityAction.Demand)] The only time in my life I have ever found myself wanting to call methods out of order has been on.Net 4.0 and is explained in this article: <https://www.marcinowak.com/2010/04/08/calling-methods-out-of-order-in-net-4-0/>
