$\frac{\tau_1 - \tau_2}{\tau_1 + \tau_2} \right)$  Clearly, the generalisation to the case of a non-trivial system is straightforward. For completeness, we have considered the more general case where the group parameters  $\vec{x}_i$  and  $\vec{u}_j$  are not necessarily commuting. For a given initial position  $P_0$ , the evolution of the operators  $\tau_j$  under the condition that the group parameters  $\vec{x}_i$  and  $\vec{u}_j$  are not necessarily commuting has been derived in the appendix (see Eqs.  $\tau_{j\text{nott}}$ ,  $\tau_{j\text{nott}1}$ ). As a consequence, the solution for the complex-valued function  $u_{\{nm\}}$  is the same as in Eq.  $uzav$ , but with the commutation relations in Eqs

Q: Angular Form - How to disable ng-pattern until ng-pattern-compile kicks in I have a form: It validates well and a required ng-pattern attribute is passed on to the validation. It's working until user enters 5 digits (which is the pattern) and hits the submit button. What I need to do is: somehow disable the ng-pattern attribute until my validation runs. Basically, I want to have multiple instances of the form running on the same page, and the user must fill 5 digits to validate his form but only one of them must be validated. Is this possible? Thanks. A: You can define a directive that will encapsulate the form, and on submission check for the required ng-pattern flag. Working example, with the form within a ng-repeat HTML `{{field.num}}`
