It is not hard to show that any collection which is similar to S must contain S . My question is : Is there any collection similar to S which does not contain S ? A: This is true for any infinite collection S . If it's not true for a finite collection, then we can take an element not in S and add it to the list of S . The resulting collection is similar to S , and it's a finite list, so it doesn't contain S . If S is finite, then the answer is yes: every proper subset of S is similar to S . We can use our extra element to get a proper subset of S which is similar to S and not equal to S , and it's easy to prove this is an example of a proper subset that doesn't contain S .
