3200/5200 m OBJECTIVE:* To maintain temperature gradients over full water depths without conventional ballast as well as without buoyant materials. METHOD: Our approach to solve the diel problem of regular temperature gradients over a 3600 m swim-time (6 h in each abyssal trench) was the use of limited and constant circulation over the whole body with the pressure tank serving as ballast. The loop of the circulation is formed by a hinged plastic tube affixed (to the 1st size of the tank) to the upper edge of the thermoplastic mould. The heated fluid, transporting the heat to the plastic tube, loops in the mould, the adapted lower edge follows and the 2nd volume of the thermoplastic mould is finally transferred into the 3rd volume and so on. RESULTS: Using thermoplastic moulds, the maximum weight of the E&Y CS1F3P is 12 kg. The circulation in the tank leads to constant maintenance of the heat, with the pressure tank serving as ballast. Also the autonomy of the biorad system is excellent. CONCLUSION: All the available seawater in the thermoplastic tanks can be utilized as a driving liquid to balance the advection with the surface currents or with the geostrophic current. Most of the seawater can be utilized even in exchange with the surface current, obtaining an estimated seawater exchange of 32.7%.- Hello, and welcome back to Crash Course Organic Chemistry. In the last lecture, we defined two of the basic waves of a periodic table. Carbon behaves similar, but different. Acids behave similar, but different than in carbon. Buckminsterfullerene, or Buckyball, is both an atom of carbon and a molecule, very large, 1.8 billion electron volts, 1.8 billion electron volts. Scheme 3 was a periodic table for the elements that are mostly carbon and mostly hydrogen. New stuff is thrown in, synthetic, organic groups that react in a similar way to the unsaturated bonds in a carbon molecule. Also, last time we talked about the hydrocarbons, molecules with hydrogen's hydrogen. We have oxygen, hydrogen, carbon. Very basic, highly reactive

Gameplay The game is a platformer, a genre that has 2 main characteristics: The player controls a moving object in a 2D (platform) or 3D environment that may have a physics engine. It is to move the player to a goal. The player uses the game controllers for left click or right click on the game board. The player's character can jump, roll, jump + roll, and jump + roll over ledges and surfaces. The player's character can hold an item, use a tool, or can jump over a hazard. The player's character can rotate in order to dodge hazards. The player's character can avoid passing through hazards by using Jump skill, because jumping over a hazard cause the player to rotate and can be harmful. The player's character can rotate in order to choose what way to go in a hazard. The player's character can jump over objects or through blocks. The item that the player is holding can be used to change gravity. The coins that the player pick up are useful for unlocking and can be used to buy new upgrades. The game can be played for free. The user can play the game by pressing the left and right click keys on the controller, or use a controller connected to their computer. Character movements Jumping and Rolling Jumping in this game is a mixture of both multi-directional jumping and also regular jumping. Multi-directional jumping is performed by a combination of Left Click + Click; or using a Jump + Click. Rolling in this game is a similar technique to Vaulting, but you don't have an opposite momentum like Vaulting. If the player is rolling and comes to a stop, because of using the Roll + Jump skill, the player will be in the newy position he just jumped. The same will happen if the player is in jumping and comes to a stop, due to being of medium height and using the Jump + Roll skill.
