
Why Is Homework Important Statistics LINK

To understand why homework is important and necessary, it is important to understand the ways in which it is used by schools and students. In certain classes, such as math and science, homework has been found to be an important teaching tool. But the overall effect of homework is unclear. It's long been known that good students do better in school. But not all. And specific times at school have been identified as impactful in the academic performance of a student. Previous studies have shown that homework does not have a significant effect in elementary and middle school. Others argue that homework allows the student to keep the brain sharp for studying. From this perspective, homework is an important tool in building a student's academic skills. If your child is in the fourth grade, you might assign an hour of homework for each two hours of homework for a total of four hours of homework each day. If the time allowed for homework is a half hour, then you would assign two hours of homework each day. . . 10 Homework Reasons Why It's Important in a Student's Education . By Katherine O'Neil

The need for homework is usually the reason cited by parents, but there are many reasons why it is so important for a student's education. For instance, after a student has been taught a concept, homework allows him or her to practice it. "With all due respect, homework is just another word for 'drill,'" has been said by many students. (from my hard working students in 1998) "Homework is the most stressful thing when I am supposed to do a ton of it every night. It is just terrible! I have to worry all night whether I did my homework correctly or not, and then I have to worry whether I will be able to do it well in the morning." (from a student who has not done the homework in the past.) . . . 10 Homework Reasons Why It's Important in a Student's Education . The general direction of research into the relationship between homework and academic achievement has been toward the negative. In spite of the amount of research on the issue, we still do not know if homework is important. This is especially true for elementary school homework it does have a positive impact on academic performance. The third cited reason for doing homework is that homework allows a student to work independently rather than in a group. . . 10 Homework Reasons Why It's Important in a Student's Education . "Homework is a waste of time

Download

