This handy application lets you use your webcam as a network security camera. The program acts as a surveillance camera and you can either monitor your webcam from a remote PC, or you can use the offline mode to download the camera records in a file that you can save. The program records in the stand-alone JPEG

format. The process requires you to be constantly online, even when you are not using it. However, it doesn't take up a lot of RAM (between 25 and 50 MiB), and it is capable of recording your webcam in real-time when you are online. When the camera is offline, the recording will start automatically when you are back online. By default, you can download your recordings to your PC, but this is a very tedious and time-consuming process. The Free Offline Mode solves that problem. You just have to set the download option on the web interface, and then you can remotely view your video files on a browser in real time, on your other computers and/or on your mobile phone. In the offline mode you can specify the directory where you would like to save the videos, as well as how many seconds of videos to store (minimum and maximum). The offline mode also has a checkbox to activate an automatic backup once every 24 hours. While the video camera is recording, you will see a small camera icon next to the online status icon. You will receive an email every time a new video is uploaded, so that you can watch it from your PC. The application works on any computer as long as you have Java Runtime Environment. The application supports online streaming to any other computer. Any problem with the webcam or other problems with your network/internet connection will stop the service and any new data will not be retrieved. The service is 100% working as advertised. The offline mode, which allows you to avoid downloading the videos, is one of the main features of the security cam. However, the free version does not support a preset camera. If you want
