Q: Conditional compilation error I wrote a file called foobar.h. I have two compilations, Debug and Release. I'm getting the following compilation error: Error 24 error C4250: 'std::setw' : nested name specifier is not allowed foobar.h #ifndef DEBUG # define DEBUG #endif #ifdef RELEASE # define RELEASE #endif #include "someOtherCode.h" someOtherCode.h #ifdef DEBUG # include "foobar.h" #endif #ifdef RELEASE # include "foobar.h" #endif These headers are include by several different files. Is it a problem if foobar.h is included multiple times? A: This will work if you forward declare foobar.h in someOtherCode.h and not include foobar.h.

In 2017 the top four countries exported $2.9T in oil and gas, up 11% over 2016. The U.S. was the top exporter, exporting almost $1.4T in 2017. EIA exports data is published quarterly. When EIA publishes its latest data, they are in month-of-year (MoY) format, so if you want to look at year-end exports that’s when you need to look. In a word, that’s November – the most recent data. In 2018 the U.S. consumed $0.8T in oil and gas, while other top exporters were UAE ($3.8T), Venezuela ($3.4T), Russia ($1.8T), Saudi Arabia ($1.6T), and Canada ($1.4T). EIA published energy imports in data point form in 2017, so it’s easy to get this data set straight out of a year report. According to EIA, the top four countries imported $5.2T in oil and gas, up 20% over 2016. It’s worth noting that China also was up 20% at $1.6T. In 2018, in November and December, the top four countries imported a total of $5.3T, which includes liquids and natural gas liquids (NGLs). So again, U.S. imports were flat or fell in the latest period. But it also included oil, which rose 19% in 2018 over 2017. Going back to the oil and gas exports data, in 2017, the top four countries imported $4.1T in oil and gas, up
