The story stars student nurses at Sydney University, Emily and Kim, who have developed a close friendship. The story, which is based on recent events in the life of the young nurses, has been shortlisted in four different categories and has won the Sydney University Student Association (SUSA) award. The shortlist is in the Young Adult Fiction category which includes non-fiction pieces that inspire and engage with teen or young adult themes, and the Big Lead Fiction award, which covers the fiction category. Other nominees from Sydney and other universities with which Caitlyn was involved were also shortlisted in their categories. Caitlyn said she felt great to have won the award. "I'm so impressed by other students and their work. The different kinds of stories that were submitted ranged from the dark and poignant to the funny and light-hearted," she said. "I definitely felt very lucky to be part of the NYAWC and to have won that award. It really shows just how much competition there is in the YA fiction market." Caitlyn will be accompanied by her sister Clo and her best friend Sarah on her overseas travel to Adelaide where she will also be presenting her story at a workshop with other shortlisted writers Yvonne D'Amour (born May 24, 1959) is an American actress, author, and editor.
