Changes in serum enzyme activities during the first 10 days after experimental trauma and its relationship to mortality. Serum enzyme activities were measured daily during the first 10 days after trauma in 22 dogs with an average mortality rate of 90%. Serum glutamic oxaloacetic transaminase (GOT) activity increased significantly during the first 5 days after trauma and remained elevated for 10 days. Serum lactate dehydrogenase (LDH) activity followed a similar pattern. Serum alkaline phosphatase (AP) activity decreased to near normal levels (mean +/- standard error of the mean: 16 +/- 3 IU/L) by 1 day after trauma. This could be attributed to the concurrent fall in serum potassium concentration and may indicate the onset of liver damage. Phosphate concentration (mean +/- standard error of the mean: 1.78 +/- 0.16 mmol/L) was not affected by trauma. LDH was positively correlated with GOT ($r = 0.91$), whereas AP and phosphorus were negatively correlated ($r = -0.67$, and $r = -0.77$, respectively). AP was also negatively correlated with both AP ($r = -0.64$) and phosphorus ($r = -0.63$) and positively correlated with potassium ($r = 0.51$). There was no correlation between any of the enzymes and potassium. LDH and GOT had a significant negative correlation with the death rate ($r = -0.67$ and $r = -0.55$, respectively). This study suggests that measurements of serum enzyme activities may provide a means of identifying individuals at high risk of developing liver dysfunction after trauma and that these enzyme changes precede the elevation of serum bilirubin concentration and the onset of shock.

Q: Using git, how can I delete a file from origin, but keep the changes for that file? Say I have a file in my repo called 'file.php' that I modify regularly. I'm looking for a way to use git to delete that file from origin, and while doing so, keep the changes for that file. So the outcome would be that 'file.php'
