IDM 6.38 Build 15.Last summer, in this space, I chronicled a terrifically expensive exhibition at the American Academy in Rome, "Toward Something Like a Realist Avant-garde." That exhibition, curated by Giorgio Miceli, included some fascinating major examples, like the works of Jacques-Henri Lartigue, but also included additional fascinating work by many artists who had hitherto been under-recognized (and might not even have known about the exhibition). It was stunningly big, with a catalogue featuring essays by a dozen or so academics, and sculptures and videos and photographs and watercolors everywhere. Just when you think an American painter like Leo and David Edwards, now in their seventies, can't do anything any longer, you hear about their upcoming show at an institution in Ireland or England or Sweden. Just when you think a still-young, still-unrecognized American painter like William Loeffler, now in his sixties, can't make new work any longer, we hear about his new show at another institution in Ireland or England or Sweden. So far, so good. Keep it up, Leo and David, keep it up, William! But the exhibition at the American Academy in Rome took place in 2015. It was big, sure, but that's so last summer. Are we still talking about it? No, not at all. The catalogue is out now, and it contains all the
