Shoplifting also referred to as Retail Theft and Shoplifting, is a misdemeanor (usually a Class C misdemeanor) in the United States and a felony in Canada and some other common law countries. It is a form of larceny. Definitions In the United States The US Code defines shoplifting as the unlawful taking of any merchandise, including consumer electronics, without paying for it. It occurs in retail establishments, such as grocery stores, clothing stores and department stores. The following is a list of categories used by the American Association of Motor Vehicle Administrators for reporting theft. Although there is no exact legal definition of shoplifting, the term has become synonymous with theft, as people tend to use the term "shoplifter" when referring to the thief of merchandise. Canada Section 339.01 of the Criminal Code of Canada defines "theft" to "mean an act or omission by any person of any of the following". Subsection 339.01(4) includes "the taking or assistance in the taking of merchandise or property" within its definition. Subsection 339.01(5) further defines "theft" as "the appropriation of property of another without consent, with the intention of out-rightly depriving the owner of that property". Canada's Criminal Code has two specific offence descriptions for theft of this nature. The first is theft of goods found in a retail establishment, commonly referred to as shoplifting. The second is theft from a carrier. The law also includes two prohibited acts for assisting in the illegal taking of goods. The first is the offering or providing of assistance to an offender in the illegal taking of goods. The second is the provision of "facilitation". Facilitation is explained as follows: Theft of property Theft occurs when a person knowingly or intentionally "appropriates property" of another. The term 6d1f23a050
