STEP 2: Download file from link below Social support on the phone: does the telephone provide better social support than in-person visits? Since the advent of technology, the issue of providing social support has received much attention, with particular attention paid to the telephone as a potentially useful resource. This study is an exploration of the social support provided by the telephone compared with the telephone and in-person. It also assesses whether this social support is different based on the characteristics of the respondent, as well as which level of provider support is most important to receiving support. The data were obtained from a randomized trial of a telephone-delivered intervention intended to improve outcomes for people with AIDS in the United States. In order to compare the effectiveness of in-person and telephone social support, a secondary analysis was conducted of survey data gathered at the beginning and end of the intervention. A total of 447 people were included in this secondary analysis, with 255 providing data at baseline and 243 at follow-up. There were no significant differences found between the in-person and telephone groups for the outcomes of depression, loneliness, and perceived social support. Those who saw their health care provider five times or more in the month prior to the survey reported significantly better outcomes for depression and loneliness than those who saw fewer providers. Phone-based social support is as effective as in-person support, at least as reported in the context of AIDS and a similar illness. In addition, the preference for in-person social support, especially among those receiving multiple visits to their health care providers, suggests a need for social support, irrespective of the modality. A Brief Overview of the EPTA Membership Entering the world of Traditional Auto Racing and the Automobile Club of the Philippine Islands (ACPI) becomes a rewarding experience when we are a part of the Association of Racing Authorities of the Philippines (ARAP). ARAP is a non-profit organization. Through its membership, members acquire a multitude of benefits, including the privilege to race at some of the top racing facilities in the world, political advocacy and the opportunity to access sponsorship opportunities. This year, the ARAP's new governing body has transformed how its membership is structured to ensure a more unified and accurate representation of it. The Revised ARAP Elected Powertrain Officials (R-ARAP EPO) program has been placed at the forefront to promote and nurture a strong racing culture in the country.
