Determination of trace amount of metallic elements by the on-line electrochemical detection with pretreatment by MCl gel-packed capillary column. A new method for the direct determination of trace amount of metallic elements in the liquid chromatography mass spectrometry (LC-MS) is developed. The metal ions in a sample are precipitated into a silver-modified MCl gel column and then separated by LC-electrochemical detection (LC-ECD) and LC-MS. In this work, the MCl gel column is modified by silver ions and formed a chelate with the metallic ions in the sample. The silver ions are reduced by using copper electrode to form metallic Ag nanoparticles on the capillary wall and the chelate is formed. The detection method was optimized using Pb as a test element. The detection limit for Pb is 0.01 microg/l (S/N=3). In a sequence of tests, the method was applied to the determination of four heavy metal ions (Cd, Hg, Pb, and Zn) and one c6a93da74d
