The impact of birth order, maternal age, education, and ethnicity on the perinatal mortality and morbidity of the offspring of women with a history of preterm delivery was examined. Pregnant women in the Edinburgh District who had delivered between 1973 and 1991 (N = 9,225) were linked to the Scottish Morbidity Register. Regression analysis was used to examine the effect of maternal variables on a major perinatal outcome measure (perinatal mortality or a major malformation). For the entire cohort, the perinatal mortality rate was calculated for each delivery between 1973 and 1991, for women who delivered preterm and for women who delivered term. There was a strong association between the type of delivery, perinatal mortality, and preterm birth, and the impact of these variables on the perinatal mortality was not influenced by maternal factors. For the cohort as a whole, the odds ratio for perinatal mortality with preterm compared with term birth was 3.5 (95% CI = 2.5-5.1). There was an increased risk of neural tube defects in preterm deliveries with a parity of greater than 2 (OR = 3.0; 95% CI = 1.4-6.5), delivery between 37 and 39 weeks (OR = 4.8; 95% CI = 2.3-10.3), and at the extremes of maternal age (OR = 2.2; 95% CI = 1.2-4.1 for women aged 35 years). The associations for specific malformations were similar. Maternal factors may have an independent influence on the risk of perinatal mortality in a woman who has previously had a preterm delivery. Neural tube defects may be increasing in prevalence as social, cultural, and medical standards change in the 21st century.Does the Catholic Church Have a Sexual Problem? A new book says the church has a serious sexual problem-- and it's got nothing to do with homosexuality. Nobody in the Catholic Church really knows why half the people there are celibate. It's as if 2 percent of the adult population is celibate, out of a total of 65.5 million people. Author Kathleen Norris says celibacy is like a disease. In 2002, her book "Written In My Soul" was sold in the Papal Chapel at the Vatican. She says celibacy has followed the church for centuries, and is rooted in the Medieval period, when monasteries and religious orders were becoming large and wealthy. The Church became a much more powerful and influential institution than those who stayed home, like the self-sufficient farmers of the time, she says. And so they kept the practice. "The church has wanted to control the family for so long, and it wants to control its members so much," she says. "And the essential element of the family, the mother and father and children, has been the most threatening to the institution."
