spectrum viewer allows for more detailed analysis, such as whether a particular ap is covered by wi-fi radar. if so, it might be wise to steer clear. it also lets you discover and monitor sites that might not yet have a site survey file, or sites you already have but want to re-check. as for the free mobile survey standalone app, its also a great, if overly complex, starter app. while i did not use it for this review, its features include: scan mode, scan frequency, latency, and packet loss. theres also more configurable requirements profiles, which may be a bit overkill for some (like me) but do make for interesting research. although theres also a bit of a learning curve, theres a great, hands-on tutorial here. if youre new to ekahaus software, this is a good place to start. for the more seasoned ekahau user, this is just another tool in the collection of helpful add-ons that makes spectrum viewer a must-have for business networks. in a world where wi-fi is often overlooked, it would be easy to think that this was yet another solution in the crowded field of wi-fi monitoring. but ekahaus mobile survey is a truly unique tool, offering a wealth of features and functionality you wont find elsewhere. the site survey process itself is fast and painless. the sites don't have to be left on for a long time to produce useful results, and the program is pretty good about discarding sites that it can't associate with. it is also very convenient to have the list of sites shown in a map view, so you can easily identify the exact location of a particular node or antenna.
