Plasma concentrations of thiamine (B1) and its metabolites were studied in 86 diabetic patients (37 males and 49 females) with type 2 diabetes mellitus. Simultaneous study of non-enzymatic glycation (AGE), plasma fructosamine, serum thiamine, homocysteine, methylmalonic acid and serum lipids allowed to establish a close correlation between plasma thiamine and the degree of glycaemic control in the patients studied. The lowest thiamine level was observed in those patients with poor glycaemic control as evidenced by elevated glycosylated haemoglobin, fructosamine and AGE. A direct correlation was established between thiamine and serum fructosamine concentrations. The results of the study indicate that thiamine deficiency may be encountered in the patients with type 2 diabetes mellitus with poor glycaemic control.Benefit of 6-day methotrexate-induced leukopoiesis in patients with malignant effusions: clinical and cytologic assessment. Sixteen patients with malignant effusions or ascites were given methotrexate (MTX) 5 to 10 mg intramuscularly, once a week for 6 consecutive weeks. The clinical and cytologic responses to therapy were evaluated every 2 weeks. Eight patients had liver-associated malignancies, and eight had ovarian/tubal disease; five patients had both malignancies. The maximal cytologic response (90%) was seen in patients with liver-associated malignancies after 6 weeks of therapy; responses were also seen in those with ovarian and tubal disease after 4 weeks of therapy. 5ec8ef588b
