while the rhino 2d api does not allow you to change the topology of a nurbs surface, the rhino 3d api does. for example, in rhino 3d, you can create a curve_layout which is a nurbs surface and then change its topology. if you have rhino 3d and a curve_layout object, you can use the rhino 3d api to change the topology of the curve_layout object. however, the rhino 3d api has limitations. there is a limit to the number of topology changes you can perform using the rhino 3d api, which is four. the biggest problem with any solution is that these 2,000,000 trips each year are from people with no experience of driving a tractor. the operator is also required to mount the equipment on their vehicle, and then drive. and, the control of the tractor while driving is not under human control. the operator must consciously monitor the machine and take over if they lose control. it's hard enough to control a car without a machine tipping over, and it's a huge risk. in fact, it's a bigger risk than driving a car because the tractor is heavier and has much more potential to tip over. the classic example is a vehicle which can tip over, ie. a go-kart. it's possible to tilt a go-kart at speed, but even a child could do it. but a tractor tipped over in the usa is much more serious. there are many more serious injuries that are caused by tipping over than collisions with cars. there are also more collisions with cars than tipping over. the users of the rhino should be aware of this and the risks. rhino linings is a world leader in spray-on polyurethane for trailers, atvs, and other
