For a proper understanding of the various components of the composite a:C were collected. The matrix is a metal-oxide ceramic material, which is made of an alloy of aluminum, titanium and magnesium oxide in different amounts to suit different purposes (e.g. for chemical wear protection). After the addition of a:C, the paint system is applied onto the surface of the metal-oxide ceramic material in a spray-painting or dip-painting process. U.S. Pat. No. 6,015,368 discloses a method for forming a CMP layer on a semiconductor substrate. The CMP process is applied on a wafer (100) surface before forming transistors, and the substrate material is alumina which, in turn, is formed on silicon. A chamber is furnished with a polish pad and polish blade and polished material is dried in vacuum. U.S. Pat. No. 5,099,849 discloses a CMP process for first polishing to a planar top surface of an In-P-type semiconductor substrate. The method is accomplished by providing a semiconductor substrate of an In-P-type, an n-type semiconductor substrate and a p-type semiconductor substrate in a first polishing step; in a second polishing step, polishing a section of the planar top surface of the In-P-type semiconductor substrate to a thickness of 0.35-0.3.mu.m, and in a third polishing step, polishing a section of the planar top surface of the n-type semiconductor substrate, and polishing a section of the planar top surface of the p-type semiconductor substrate. U.S. Pat. No. 5,391,255 discloses a semiconductor integrated circuit wherein a via is formed between an aluminum wiring and a silicon substrate. A sacrificial layer of silicon dioxide is formed on a substrate surface and a mask layer, such as silicon nitride, is formed on the substrate surface. The mask layer has an opening formed over the via, and the via is formed by etching the substrate through the opening in the mask layer. The silicon dioxide is then removed from the substrate surface surrounding the via to form a cavity therein

Although social competence has been linked to obesity among adolescents, little is known about the social behaviors of children, particularly preschoolers, that may predict body mass index (BMI) development. The present study examined the prevalence of obesity, overweight, and underweight in relation to parent-child interactions in early childhood. The Child Feeding Questionnaire and the Peer Relations and Aggression Scale were administered to parents of children ages 3 to 5. Subjects were selected randomly from children in outpatient clinics at a hospital serving a predominantly low socioeconomic population. A total of 240 subjects were included in the analyses. Data were analyzed using descriptive and correlation statistics. Children were excluded if they lived in foster care, had chronic health conditions, or were taking medications that could affect weight. More than half of the children were underweight, 26% were overweight, and 14% were obese. Mothers of obese children spent more time restrained in their children, were more likely to use food as a comfort, and were more likely to hit or spank their children in the past month than mothers of nonobese children. Children whose mothers had an education level of high school or greater were more likely to be overweight than children whose mothers had less than a high school education. Children from higher socioeconomic families were more likely to be underweight than children of lower socioeconomic families. Maternal use of food as a comfort for children and maternal physical aggression against children are risk factors associated with obesity. Child-parent interactions are a risk factor for obesity in early childhood. Early prevention efforts with families are needed to identify children at risk for becoming overweight or obese and to target interventions accordingly.
