KEYMACRO is a small, free, cross-platform, keyboard driver for macros, of which the capabilities and interface are very similar to Microsoft's AutoHotkey. With KEYMACRO, you can create key sequences that will be executed based on the trigger that you set. For example, you can make a hotkey to switch between two windows, or you can have a key shortcut that will make your computer turn off, or make it copy a file to your desktop, while moving it to your DVD drive. What's more, you can do all this stuff automatically, without having to deal with your mouse! This software allows you to use macros and hotkeys in a completely different way. Not only that, you can have your keyboard emulate mouse movements, so that you can use it like a mouse. Some of the macros you can create with this software are: * Copy a file to your desktop * Make your computer shut down or turn off * Switch between two windows * Make your computer focus on a window * Click on a window and move to the next * Click on a window and close it * Send a hotkey to your virtual keyboard * Scroll to the end of a webpage * Play an mp3 file * Select a song in iTunes * Do some math calculations * Execute a command in the terminal * Make your browser navigate to another website * Zoom in/out with your browser * Make your browser focus on another window * Make your browser switch between two windows * Make your browser zoom out * Make your browser zoom in * Paste text from the clipboard * Switch to full screen mode * Switch to windowed mode * Turn your computer on or off * Open a new window in your favorite browser * Display your desktop on the virtual keyboard * Display your desktop on the virtual keyboard and select a new window * Display your desktop on the virtual keyboard and focus on the desktop * Display your desktop on the virtual keyboard and scroll down with the arrow keys * Turn your computer off * Turn your computer on * Run a program * Remove an item from your desktop * Maximize your windows * Minimize your windows * Select an item from your clipboard * Print your document * Start your web browser * Open a file from your desktop * Open a file from your desktop and switch to the terminal * Switch to full screen mode * Zoom in 2edc1e01e8

As you can see from the brief summary, the bill creates a new statute that allows the governor, a county sheriff, and a sheriff's deputy, to request and receive training in the use of deadly force from a local law enforcement agency, even if that agency does not have a similar training program. This training would be restricted to those who have been involved in a shooting. Unfortunately, this bill is not going to help victims of police violence. Let me explain why. The worst news about this bill is that it would permit local law enforcement agencies to become de facto training agencies for local police. The fact that the law enforcement agency has no similar training program is irrelevant. In fact, there may be a situation where there is no agency with a similar training program, but the local agency is willing to train its officers for free. The law enforcement agency can request this training from another local law enforcement agency even if that agency does not have a training program. The local law enforcement agency could be requesting the training from an agency that has a training program, but it's the same agency -- a local law enforcement agency that does not have a training program. For the training to be effective, it would have to be comprehensive. The agency would be expected to design its own training program and implement it. In many cases, that could be more effective than a few officers getting a few hours of training from one of the other agencies. It may not be effective. A very small agency, for example, might have a good idea of what it wants to do but it might not be very successful. But it's not the training program that matters. What matters is that the training is comprehensive. Otherwise, it is meaningless. The agency that is providing the training might have the advantage of being able to implement a good training program but that doesn't matter. It's
