A: This is a common method of preventing piracy, but can quickly become unwieldy: Serial numbering stops as soon as the first pirated software is sold. This is the primary limitation of any of these methods. Note that the malware authors simply insert a number for each copy of the software. Note that it is the owners of the software who have to be protected. A better solution is to use a public-key cryptosystem such as OpenPGP: The publisher encrypts the software using a public key and generates a digital signature. The software is distributed using an open standard. This does not require a public key. Here is an example: The developer generates a public key $A$ and private key $B$. The publisher encrypts a software file using $A$. The end user can verify it is genuine by verifying that $B$ has been digitally signed. This is done using the key $B$. See the GPG manual, "What is PGP" and "The GPG Public Key System (Why and How)" Gondar Airport Gondar Airport is an airport serving Gondar, the capital of the Amhara Region of Ethiopia.
