Macro recorder plays notes for you You're able to record any musical instrument, whether it's a piano, organ, guitar, or anything that can be connected to your computer. You'll need to have a VST or AU plugin for the instrument you want to record, so in that regard this is more of a visual demo of what a particular instrument can do. Virtual instruments aren't for everyone If you're someone who's used to plug-ins, this probably isn't the place for you. The control interface is fairly basic, and sometimes gets in the way of how it should function. In other words, you can't really change settings, or make adjustments like turning on or off different instruments. If you want to do that you'll need to visit the VST menu. Macro recorder plays notes for you To record a sound you can simply hold down a key on your keyboard, and Macro Recorder will record the note for you. You don't need to have any specific plugin installed. You can simply play any musical instrument using your keyboard. The fact that you need a certain plugin installed to record a sound is going to be a turn-off for many users, so make sure you're aware of that before you proceed. NOTES RECORDING: Can record only the active instrument Even though Macros can record a note for the currently active instrument, they can't record if an instrument isn't actually active. It's kind of a usability flaw in Macro Recorder. There's no way to record multiple instrument Macro Recorder only records the currently active instrument. To record a second instrument you'll have to stop recording on the first one, record the note on the second instrument, and then merge both recordings together. You can't play back what you record You can't play back what you record. That's because Macro Recorder records the note as a single instrument, and not as an arrangement of multiple instruments. There's no way to modify the recordings made Macro Recorder doesn't give you any way to adjust your recording. If you want to use the software to play back a certain combination of instruments you'll need to record all of those instruments at the same time. Macro recorder plays notes for you 2edc1e01e8

Multi-amp Tone Stack Calculator is the ultimate amp simulator. It simulates several different types of amplifier and allows you to visualize frequency, power, decay, distortion, and signal-to-noise ratio at a glance. This allows you to see how the different components of the amp work together to create the sound you are trying to recreate. Best of all, this isn't a simulation in the traditional sense. It is based on real audio circuits and therefore it provides you with actual measurements that are accurate. So even if you don't understand a concept or circuit, you can still learn by reading the description of each component of the circuit. What's New In Tone Stack Calculator?

Tone Stack Calculator is a useful simulation tool which will make you never ever need to buy a new amplifier ever again. See the tone of your guitar by simulating real world applications of amplifier technology. Circuit parameters can be easily modified to test if they will affect the tone of your guitar. In real-time mode you can adjust the different treble, bass and middle frequencies to see how they impact on your guitar's tone. Features: - Real time frequency graph - Real time graphical data representation - Tuning simulator, Fender Classic and Fender Jazz circuit models - Different amplifier types to choose from - Special mode to simulate a 2-way system Review: * While the app does actually work for me, it is extremely buggy. I am still undecided whether I should spend the time to work on the app, or not. At the moment it seems the support only can be reached by a strange phone number. The app also has some weirdly low level of the sound and its driving me mad. I will keep testing the app, but expect a lot of bugs and weird behavior. See also my review on the Windows Store. Suggestions: * If you find bugs with the sound. See if you can contact support on Skype. Platform: * Windows Phone * Windows 8 * Windows 8.1 * Windows 10 Mobile * Windows 10 Frequency Range: * Frequencies can be low or high, but not in between. The frequency ranges also seem to be a bit out of order, with 100Hz as the lowest frequency and 10kHz as the highest. The frequencies will not be listed correctly after a few seconds. Version: * 8.1.8.0 Language: * English * English (UK) * English (US) * Deutsch * English (Australia) * Español
