In the same year that she completes high school, Jasna Marinca's life is ripped apart by a brutal double murder that leaves her father's colleagues as prime suspects. Armed with a camera and a strong stomach for film, Jasna sets out to capture the events that led up to the killings. It's her first chance to tell her father's story, which she hopes will be the turning point in her life. DIRECTOR BECIM TURGUT (Turkey) DIRECTOR BECIM TURGUT (Turkey)Systematic review of the prevalence of pain, disability, and psychological distress in people living with hepatitis C. Chronic hepatitis C virus (HCV) infection is associated with hepatitis Crelated morbidity, pain, and psychological distress. Research has documented prevalence rates of these outcomes. However, there is an absence of a comprehensive systematic review of these outcomes in chronic HCV infection. To estimate the prevalence of the pain and psychological outcomes, we undertook a systematic review of studies reporting prevalence rates of pain, pain interference, anxiety, and depression in chronic HCV infection. Data sources included a MEDLINE search (years 1966-2007), a manual literature search, hand searches of reference lists, and consultation with experts. After abstract and full-text review, prevalence rates were calculated as pooled prevalence rates with 95% confidence intervals. We included 27 studies in the analysis. The pooled prevalence of pain ranged from 38.6% to 71.8%, and anxiety and depression ranged from 34.7% to 82.2% and from 9.4% to 62.5%, respectively. There is substantial variability between studies in methods of measurement, making it difficult to determine if this reflects true differences in the underlying prevalence. Unfortunately, little information was provided to facilitate the choice of reliable and valid instruments. Nonetheless, the available evidence suggests that pain is prevalent, severe, and impairing in chronic HCV infection. Anxiety and depression may be moderateto-severe.
